

Native Americans in Philanthropy
2006 Annual Report

The View from the Chair

As the Chairman of Native Americans in Philanthropy, I am honored to extend greetings on behalf of our Board. We are pleased to report on the progress achieved by our organization, partners and members in 2006. Here is a brief word about the past year.

Our first annual Native Philanthropy Institute, held in April 2006, was an important milestone. This event was developed in direct response to feedback from our members. It brought together a diverse group of philanthropic professionals, Native and non-Native leaders. After two days of information sharing, skill building, networking and education, the Institute created a momentum that propelled us throughout the year.

Another important milestone in 2006 was a new endeavor to focus our communications, messaging and outreach activities. Working with NAP staff, a communications committee of board directors and NAP members, and a qualified outside consultant, we are enhancing and upgrading our web presence, electronic and print communications and membership outreach. A key goal of this work is to raise our visibility with key leaders in the Native and philanthropic communities.

Most important of all, we successfully launched a Native nonprofit leadership development program that is intended to have broad impact both locally and nationally. We are proud of the first Circle of Leadership participants, nine individuals who are committed to service and interested in pursuing careers in philanthropy or developing tribal philanthropic giving programs for the ultimate benefit of Native communities. After participating in the 18-month program, these leaders are applying new lessons to their important work in Native communities. Further, we hope that program components can be shared with similar efforts across the country.

Taken individually, each of these initiatives is significant. But taken together, they represent an unprecedented effort by Native Americans in Philanthropy to arm a new generation of philanthropic leaders with the experience; knowledge and unified resolve that we all need to confront the many stubborn challenges facing Indian Country. Please read this Annual Report carefully. We hope you will share our pride in the hard work and accomplishments it describes. If you have any questions or comments, please share them with me, my fellow board directors, or our staff members.

Sincerely,

David Cournoyer

Our History and Mission

Founded in 1990, Native Americans in Philanthropy (NAP) is a national 501c(3) non-profit organization that promotes, facilitates and celebrates philanthropic giving to Native communities from Native and non-Native donors.

This work not only enriches the lives of Native people but also strengthens relationships and enhances change-making strategies to the benefit of Native and non-Native communities. Our work focuses on:

- Maintaining continuous communications and dialogue between the philanthropic and indigenous communities;
- Providing professional development opportunities and support for Native people working in the field of philanthropy;
- Encouraging Native definitions of development and self-determination;
- Celebrating Native philanthropy as an expression of traditional values for current and future generations.

NAP is governed by a nine-member Board of Directors comprised of Native philanthropic professionals. In 1993, the all-volunteer organization retained its first professional staff, which currently consists of three individuals.

A Review of 2006

Native Americans in Philanthropy focused its 2006 program efforts in several key areas, including:

- Membership Recruitment and Services.

We recruited 117 new members, created new opportunities for networking, sharing and skill building, and increased staffing to improve response to member needs.

- Leadership Development.

We launched a comprehensive and new program to prepare committed individuals for future roles as leaders in Native and non-Native philanthropic organizations.

- Partnerships and Collaborations

We worked with universities, tribal governments, consultants, private foundations and other entities on research projects and the development of resources for tribes and philanthropic leaders.

- Communications and Visibility.

We began a project to clarify our mission, enhance our communications capabilities, expand our contacts with tribal leaders, and increase our visibility in Indian Country and the foundation community.

This report provides a brief update on our accomplishments in each of these key areas.

Membership Recruitment and Services

Expanding our membership base and offering a broader menu of member services and benefits has been a major focus in 2006. We successfully recruited 97 new individual and 20 new organizational members, each of them bringing a unique background and fresh perspective to our work.

Our new Membership and Program Coordinator, Carrie Day-Aspinwall, joined the staff in 2006. Her responsibilities include responding to member needs, coordinating programs with our various partners, and gathering success stories to improve awareness of Native philanthropy.

One of our most important membership services in 2006 was our first annual Native Philanthropy Institute. The institute was developed in response to a survey revealing that NAP members wanted more opportunities for networking, sharing and skill-building. The event included sessions on board development, fundraising, investments and asset management, communications, legal issues, and Native values and traditions of sharing.

The 2006 Institute was also highlighted by the presentation of two prestigious NAP awards. The Louis T. Delgado Distinguished Grantmaker Award was awarded to Barbara Poley and Loris Taylor for their work in building bridges between the Hopi Nation and the non-Native philanthropic community.

The Flying Eagle Woman award was presented to Gabrielle Strong of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Nation, for her accomplishments in leading community-based change and strengthening sovereignty through the preservation of the Dakota language, which she described as a “cherished treasure.”

Leadership Development

The launch of the Circle of Leadership program was one of the most important NAP efforts of 2006. Initially serving the greater Midwest, the program can be expanded nationwide. It has brought a group of extraordinarily committed individuals together for training, mentorship and skill-building to help them realize their full potential as Native philanthropic leaders. Developed in partnership with several different organizations, the program’s initial costs are underwritten by a grant from the Otto Bremer Foundation.

The first nine participants in the Circle of Leadership program come from three different states, representing multiple tribal affiliations and diverse professional backgrounds. Participants include nonprofit organization and foundation board members, tribal educators and a social services worker, fundraising officers, government employees working in health and community development, and an economic and workforce development specialist.

Partnerships & Collaborations

In 2006 NAP reached out to a number of tribal governments, academic institutions, private foundations and consultants on wide-ranging collaborative research and resource development projects.

Teaming up with the Center for Urban Research and Learning at Loyola University of Chicago, NAP produced “A Demographic Profile of Independently Incorporated Native American Foundations and Selected Funds in the U.S.,” a document that provides basic demographic information on 60 Native-controlled philanthropic organizations, 36 Native foundations, 15 nonprofit organizations and nine tribal funds. Representatives of NAP presented the profile and advice on how to get involved in philanthropy at the annual meeting of the National Indian Gaming Association in March 2006.

NAP partnered with the Joint Affinity Group (JAG) of the Council on Foundations to host a February 2007 West Coast Native Philanthropy Gathering in Los Angeles in conjunction with JAG’s Unity Summit. The meeting resulted in the creation of a mechanism for on-going dialogue through volunteer liaisons.

At the urging of several Minnesota foundations, NAP in 2006 began developing a funding and programming “map” of Native communities in Minnesota. The map, developed in collaboration with Bowman Consultants, will identify foundations and other non-profit organizations throughout Minnesota who are working with Native communities, and analyze their giving patterns as well as the opportunities and challenges they encounter in the process.

In addition, NAP is working with the Center on Philanthropy at Indiana University, Fond du Lac Tribal and Community College, the Headwaters Foundation's Fund of the Sacred Circle Endowment Campaign and New Ventures in Philanthropy on a variety of research, curriculum development and online learning projects focusing on Native philanthropy.

Communications and Visibility

In 2006 NAP launched a major effort to elevate our organization's profile in both the tribal and philanthropic communities.

To increase awareness of NAP among funding organizations, we co-planned and implemented several activities, including a panel on family foundations at a meeting of the Council on Foundations; a briefing on Native American education issues for Grantmakers for Education, hosted by the American Indian College Fund; and production of a special edition of the Minnesota Council of Foundations newsletter focusing on Native issues. We also responded to many requests from funders seeking ways to collaborate with Minnesota's Native communities in the wake of the tragic shootings at Red Lake.

A six-month communications capacity-building project has been initiated with support from a grant from the Carnegie Corporation. Working with a consultant experienced in both communications and Native issues, we are working to bring more clarity and focus to our mission, restructure our membership program to increase opportunities for participation, expand our one-on-one contacts with key tribal and philanthropic leaders, enhance our web presence, improve the effectiveness of our online and print communications, and increase our visibility in Indian Country.

Summary

In many respects, 2006 was a benchmark year for Native Americans in Philanthropy. We are making the transition from a small organization to one with growing national presence and credibility. The key to future success is to stay focused on our mission—promoting, facilitating and celebrating philanthropic giving to Native communities from both Native and non-Native donors.

In order to accomplish that mission, we must continue to identify, educate and motivate future Native philanthropic leaders, and provide them the opportunities they need to reach their full potential and bring maximum value to the communities we all serve.
